Title: Raising a Concern
Version: 1.0 | Effective date: 1 January 2026 | Owner: Ethics Office

SYNTHETIC DOCUMENT - fictional guidance created for a technical prototype. It does not describe any real organisation's policy.

Raising a Concern

1. Purpose and scope

This policy explains how to report a new concern about suspected misconduct, a possible conflict of interest, improper gifts or hospitality, retaliation, or any other breach of the Organisation's policies.

2. Who can raise a concern

Any employee, contractor or temporary worker may raise a concern. Concerns must be raised in good faith.

3. Reporting channels

Concerns can be submitted through: the Integrity Portal online form; the Ethics Helpline by phone; email to the Ethics Office; or a line manager, who must pass the concern to the Ethics Office within 2 business days.

4. Information to include

Required information: (a) a description of the concern, including what happened and who was involved if known; and (b) the approximate date or period when the incident happened.

Helpful but optional information: the location or business area, supporting documents, and the names of any witnesses.

If required information is missing, the Ethics Office may contact you to ask for it before the assessment can begin.

5. Anonymous concerns

Concerns may be submitted anonymously through the Integrity Portal or the Ethics Helpline. Anonymous reporters receive an anonymous access key to check status and answer follow-up questions. Anonymous concerns can be harder to assess if the Ethics Office cannot ask for more detail.

6. After you submit

You will receive an acknowledgement with a case reference number. Timelines and follow-up are covered in POL-002 Case Follow-Up and Status Update Policy.

7. Do not investigate yourself

Do not gather evidence by accessing systems or records you are not authorised to use, and do not confront the people involved. Report what you know and let the Ethics Office assess it.
